

The Gretna Courier has discovered that Bienville was the first Chief Executive of Louisiana, and exclaims in a spirit of patriotism: "Is it not both a shame and disgrace that not a street in the city founded by Bienville, or a bayou, lake, river, hamlet, village or town is made to bear the name of the first Chief Executive of our now great, glorious and productive commonwealth?" The Courier must examine a map of the State. There is certainly a parish named after Bienville, and, if we mistake not, a town. The writer in the Courier must certainly have heard of Bienville street, in this city. However, it is as little as the people of New Orleans could do, to erect a monument to the founder of so fine a city.
