

Louisiana's Next First Lady Lived in Dallas in Girlhood

Mrs. Sam H. Jones, wife of the Governor-nominate of Louisiana, was born in Dallas in 1901 and spent her early girlhood here. She has a number of relatives here.

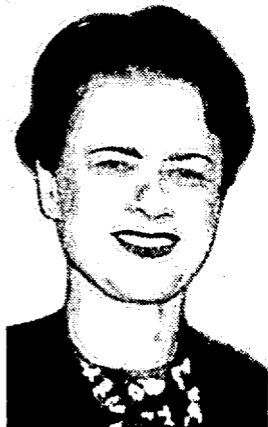

The wife of the Louisiana lawyer who broke the Long machine is the former Louise Gambrell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Gambrell, now living in Phoenix, Ariz. The family left Dallas to live in El Paso when she was a small girl. She attended El Paso public schools, graduating from the El Paso High School. Later she attended the Texas School of Mines.

"Mrs. Jones has a wonderful personality and will make a charming hostess in the Governor's Mansion," said Mrs. J. H. Gambrell, 3543 University, a cousin. "I remember her as a small girl here."

Sam Jones married her six years ago. She previously had been married to an Army officer named Boyer.

Among her relatives living in Dallas are Herbert Gambrell, Rodney Gambrell, Mrs. Newton Holloway and Mrs. C. M. Henry, children of Mrs. J. H. Gambrell; Mrs. Frank A. Nisbet, daughter of the late Dr. J. B. Gambrell, and Mrs. Nisbet's children, Misses Fairfax and Jacquelin Nisbet, and Eric Gambrell, grandson of Dr. Gambrell.

Mrs. Jones' relatives hoped she and her husband would visit in Dallas when he goes to Arizona to visit relatives, as he has stated he will do before taking office.
