

PACKARD, the whipped and whining vagabond who failed to make himself military Governor of Louisiana, has been in Iowa looking for consolation, and among the riotously righteous he got it, to the discredit of Hayes. In his speech he said :

Three years from this time, if the Republican party is defeated, you understand it is the Democratic party that succeeds, and if the Democratic party succeeds it is the confederacy that is in charge of the Government, and you all know what that means. (Loud applause and cheers; cries of that's so.)

Mr. Packard, it seems, has yet to learn that confederacy, like Democracy and Republicanism, had been placed among the relics of the rebellion.